

Wallpaper*

The residential developments reshaping Miami's skyline

ARCHITECTURE / 22 FEB 2018

When it comes to Miami, the real estate quip 'location, location, location' might well be appended with unreasonably sunny weather and easy access to the sea. Miami, it seems, is always surfing on an endless wave of new residential high-rises making it the ultimate destination for sun, sea – and skyscrapers. Surf's up!

Brickell Flatiron

20 February 2018

Just launched to market at the top of the Brickell Flatiron tower in downtown Miami is a collection of penthouse residences designed by Massimo Iosa Ghini. The Italian designer and architect - known internationally for his work from designing showrooms for Ferrari to furniture for the late David Bowie - is 'bringing a touch of Milan to the Miami skyline' with the newly-unveiled penthouse interiors.

Wallpaper*

Brickell Flatiron
20 February 2018

Life is good at the top of the 64-storey Brickell Flatiron where a range of residences from one to three storeys include private terraces, rooftop pools and summer kitchens. Iosa Chini has rolled out his streamlined and organic designs across the penthouses that have 10 to 11ft-high ceilings and look out across the Miami skyline and Biscayne Bay.

Wallpaper*

Brickell Flatiron
20 February 2018

Reaching over 700ft, the soaring Brickell Flatiron from the developer Ugo Colombo will soon, in 2019, become one of the tallest residential towers in the US. The distinct flowing shape with curved layers has been designed by Miami-based architect Luis Revuelta.